

Editorial Policy for the Christian Connection Blog

Thank you for your interest in submitting an article to the Christian Connection blog.

Below you can find details of our editorial policy, which clarifies how we decide which articles to publish. Before you submit an article, please read this editorial guide and the writer's guide on the blog itself.

1. All articles must be specifically geared towards our readership - single Christians looking for a serious relationship. Successful blog articles will offer a new take or discussion point on the subject of dating, relationships, faith, or singleness. Article submissions not related to these topic areas generally won't be considered.
2. We don't accept paid content placement and don't publish content which is written purely for SEO or SMO purposes. Authors are permitted to include links to external sites in their bio, provided that these links are relevant to our membership base.
3. We do not take one position on any particular doctrine, or theology. Therefore, we do not publish articles which promote very strong or divisive opinions on matters of faith or politics.
4. Our readership is international, so article submissions must be relevant to people across different countries, cultures and climates.
5. Before we can accept you as a new author, we ask that you first submit at least one previous article which you have personally written, ideally on a topic that is relevant for our audience (see point 1).
6. Once you have been approved as a guest author, we will ask you to submit your idea for a blog article first, including the title and outline for the post. This must be approved before you write the article in full.
7. Articles which have been written exclusively for Christian Connection must not be republished elsewhere for at least 3 months after they first appear on the blog.
